FRED BALDWIN OF MCGILL IS SHOT ACCIDENTALLY

On Sunday last Fred Baldwin, an old-time resident of McGill, was accidentally shot by his wife while the two were rabbit hunting. One of the small shot from the gun entered Mr. Baldwin's left eye, and it was found necessary to remove the eye after he had been taken to the Steptoe hospital. Some of the shot fired by Mrs. Baldwin struck the barrel of the gun held by Mr. Baldwin, which were deflected to his person, only one of which, however, caused a serious wound.

COAT OF ARMS FOR GERMANY

(Correspondence of Associated Press)
BERLIN, Jan. 30.—The new German coat of arms adopted by the national assembly, consists of a one-headed eagle, on a yellow gold shield, and without the old-time crown. The eagle will be displayed in simple heraldic form, without any accessories.

The Hohenzollern coat of arms, and chain of the order of the Silver Eagle, all parts of the old Prussian coat of arms, have been omitted. The bill of the eagle, the tongue and the talons are in red. Servants of the government are to wear the device without the shield so it can be pinned to their uniforms.

Some of the pan-German papers ridicule it, saying the "skinny, homely eagle with extended tongue" violates all the rules of good taste.

BLEEDING FOREIGN SHOPPERS IN BERLIN

(Correspondence of Associated Press)
BERLIN, Jan. 30.—Foreign shoppers in some Berlin stores who are unwise enough to betray their identity are being assessed 50 per cent over the retail prices to Germans. This is in accordance with a suggestion by the Berlin chamber of commerce in view of the low exchange rate of German currency.

FORMER FRENCH PREMIER ON TRIAL FOR SEDITION

(Associated Press)
PARIS, Feb. 17.—Joseph Caillaux, former premier, today faced a trial before the senate on the charge of "having plotted against the external security of the state," which offense is punishable with death.

Two years ago on January 14, 1918, for the first time in the history of the third republic of France, one of its former premiers, Joseph Caillaux, was thrust into prison on the charge of high treason and of endeavoring to make a premature and dishonorable peace with Germany. For more than twenty years he had been a power in French political life, both as premier and minister of finance.

The case against Caillaux is somewhat related to that against Robert Fauriol, who was executed at Vincennes as a spy in April, 1918, and M. Duval, editor of the Germanophile newspaper Bonnet Rouge, who went to his death for similar crimes the following July.

Caillaux was not in the cabinet when the war began. He resigned shortly after March 16, 1914, the day his wife shot and killed Gaston Calmette, editor of L'Espresso, for accusing Caillaux of having played in to Germany's hands in settling the Moroccan crisis of 1911. Louis L. Malvy, a close friend, was minister of the interior at the time Caillaux resigned. Malvy it will be remembered was later accused of high treason and tried in 1918 before the state high court. The treason charge was disproved but Malvy, a radical socialist, was convicted of other offenses and sentenced to five years' imprisonment from France. He is now an exile in Spain. Through Malvy, it is alleged, Caillaux directed efforts so that the machinations charged against him could be carried on.

Caillaux was suspected of heading a pacifist movement having as its object a reconciliation between France and Germany. The "defeatist" propaganda intended to break down the morale of the French people by leading them to believe Germany was invincible had wide ramifications. It reached from Paris to Rome and from Rome to Washington and Buenos Aires. Count von Bernstorff, formerly German ambassador at Washington, was charged with having spent more than $2,000,000 to create similar "defeatist" conditions in Italy.

Upon the acquittal of his wife and his retirement from politics, Caillaux went to war, serving in the postmaster's department of the French army. Within two months he was in trouble with British officers and subsequently with his own military superiors in Paris for which he was punished. Released from service he sailed in November, 1914, for South America and passed most of the winter in Argentina. While in Buenos Aires, it was said, he conferred with Count Karl von Luxburg, the German minister, who will be recalled as the author of a message to the German foreign office requesting the U-boats to "sink without a trace" all Argentine ships the vessels of a neutral power.

Caillaux returned to France, and was never heard from two years later in Italy. He was reported to have gone there in November, 1916, with Alphonse Caillaux, his eldest son. The Rome correspondent of the London Times, the following month charged Caillaux with trying to "plant a separate peace movement among German soldiers in the Vatican and in Italian aristocracy."

"What does Germany require?" he was quoted as having said to Marcellino, "A road to Baghdad, which she has just conquered, a big Bulgaria and a big European Turkey." As soon as peace was signed he was alleged to have said, France would draw up an alliance with Germany, Italy and Spain against Russia and England, which he characterized as really enemies of France.

Admiral de Saint-Paul, charged that Caillaux had communicated with certain prelates in the Vatican and informed them that if Italy signed a separate peace, France would be obliged to do the same. He even promised Saint Paul would the re-establishment of the diplomatic relations between France and the Holy See upon his return to power. It was as a result of these revelations that the French chamber of deputies by a vote of 417 to 22 decided that Caillaux's immunity as a deputy representing the department of Sarthe should be suspended and he be required to stand trial on the charge of high treason.

Caillaux was born in 1865 the son of a prominent politician who was minister of the interior under the presidency of Marshal MacMahon. He entered politics as a radical socialist and first came into prominence in 1899 when he became minister of finance under Waldeck Rousseau.

Public Service Is a Public Trust

The privilege of serving the public with electricity imposes the obligation to serve intelligently and willingly.

Adequate and dependable services of supply, comprehensive distribution systems and correct accounting methods are taken as a matter of course by the public and rightly so.

Added to these, however, is the necessity for intelligent and willing service to the public by the men and women who constitute the human factor in public service.

The public naturally and properly expects unfailing courtesy and intelligent appreciation of its needs. The Nevada-California Power Company recognizes these requirements as one of its primary obligations to the public it serves.

It strives to fulfill this obligation—for fulfillment results in a full measure of satisfaction and success, shared alike by customers and company.
